MESSAGE

“Technology is just a tool. In terms of getting the kids working together and motivating them, the teacher is the most important.”

Mrs. Anuradha Prashant Pore

Technology shapes every aspect of student life today.

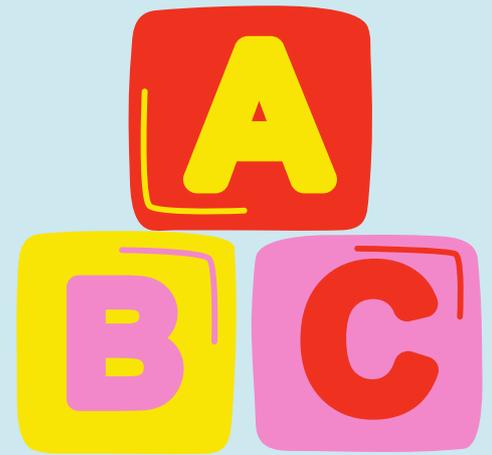

From online learning platforms to social media and career preparation, understanding how to use technology effectively gives students an edge in their academic journey and beyond.

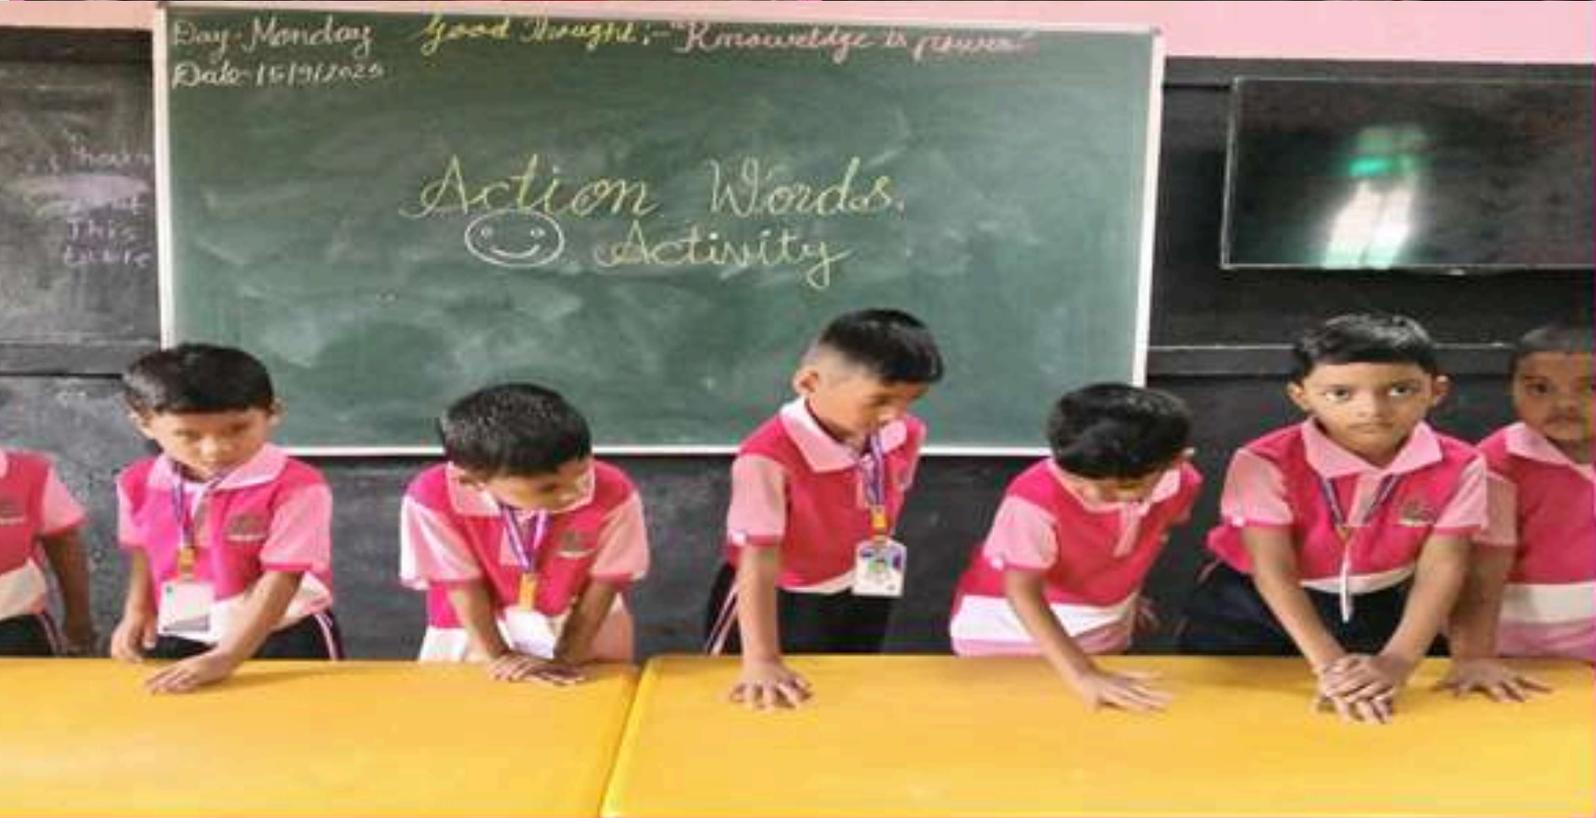

Digital skills matter tremendously for your future careers, but equally important is knowing when to disconnect. The most successful people aren't those who respond to every message instantly. They're the ones who can focus deeply on complex problems without constantly checking their phones. They use technology strategically rather than reactively, making deliberate choices about when to engage and when to disconnect.

The best preparation isn't necessarily learning specific technologies that might become outdated. It's developing your capacity to adapt, learn continuously, think critically, collaborate effectively, and approach new challenges with confidence. These qualities ensure you remain valuable in a job market where specific technical skills rise and fall in demand, but human ingenuity remains irreplaceable.
